MISS ROOSEVELT BOARDS BIG SHIP BY A ROPE LADDER

Goes Down the Bay on Revenue Cutter and Meets the Incoming Kaiser Wilhelm in True Sailor Fashion.

Miss Alice Roosevelt went down the bay this afternoon on a revenue cutter with Congressman Nicholas Longworth to meet her fiance's sister, she Countess de Chambrun, who is coming from Paris on the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse for the big wedding at the White House.

The trip in the cutter was an unexpected climax in a day strenuous enough to suit any member of the Roosevelt family. The day's doings began when a rearing cart horse almost flung his iron-shod hoofs in a coach in which Miss Roosevelt was driving down Fifth avenue.

It was while she was at lunch at Mrs. Ogden Mills' that she decided to go down the bay to greet her future sister-in-law instead of waiting for the arrival of the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse at its dock. No sooner was her mind made up than she notified Mr. Longworth by telephone, and he called up the Barge Office and arranged for the trip.

After last night's ball Miss Roosevelt slept rather late at the Goelet home at No. 22 East Seventy-second street. She took her rolls and coffee in bed about 10 o'clock. At 11.30 the Goelet carriage, a dark blue rig, was backed around to the front of the house. A moment later Congressman Longworth's fiancée came out of the front door with her hostess, Mrs. Goelet, and the two young women walked down the stone steps together.

Miss Roosevelt, usually pale, had a becoming flush of color in her cheeks. She wore a close-fitting coat suit of dark green cloth trimmed with strips of black astrakhan. Her hat was a small fur turban, with a rakish wing set in one side of it. Her gloves were white kid and her spats of gray felt.

A crowd was packed close about the stop. The photographer's outfit began to call the moment Miss Alice came in sight. Neither of the young women by any sign betrayed that she knew the crowd existed.

They entered the carriage and it turned into Fifth avenue enroute to the Ogden Mills home, at No. 2 East Sixty-ninth street.

The coachman must have misunderstood the direction which Mrs. Goelet gave him, for he kept right on down the avenue. When he reached Sixty-ninth street Miss Roosevelt noticed the mistake. She leaped her head from the coach window and called to the man on the box. The footman jumped to the street the better to catch what she was saying. At the same instant the coachman, seeing his error, swung his team about in a short circle. This happened near Sixty-eighth street.

Standing near the west curb was a horse hitched to a doctor's delivery wagon. This horse took fright at the Goelet team, with their jingling chain harness, rounded to almost under his neck.

He reared straight up, lashing out with his fore legs. His hoofs beat a tattoo in the air within an inch or two of the right hand window of the coach which was open. Miss Roosevelt, as it happened, sat on the right-hand side of the carriage. She shrunk back from the danger. Mrs. Goelet uttered a short exclamation.

The peril was past in a moment. Policeman O'Connor ran into the street, seized the horse by the head and pulled him down flat-footed and docile.

The carriage, stopping only long enough to pick up the footman, turned into Sixty-ninth street and halted at the Ogden Mills home. After the two callers had gone inside the house the coach returned to the Goelet house.

Miss Roosevelt and Mrs. Goelet remained at the Mills mansion half an hour. When they came out Mrs. Ogden Mills' twin daughters, Beatrice and Gladys, were with them.

Walking at a brisk gait and chatting gaily together, the four young women went east toward Madison avenue. Behind them trailed several hundred curious provincials of the terrapin district.

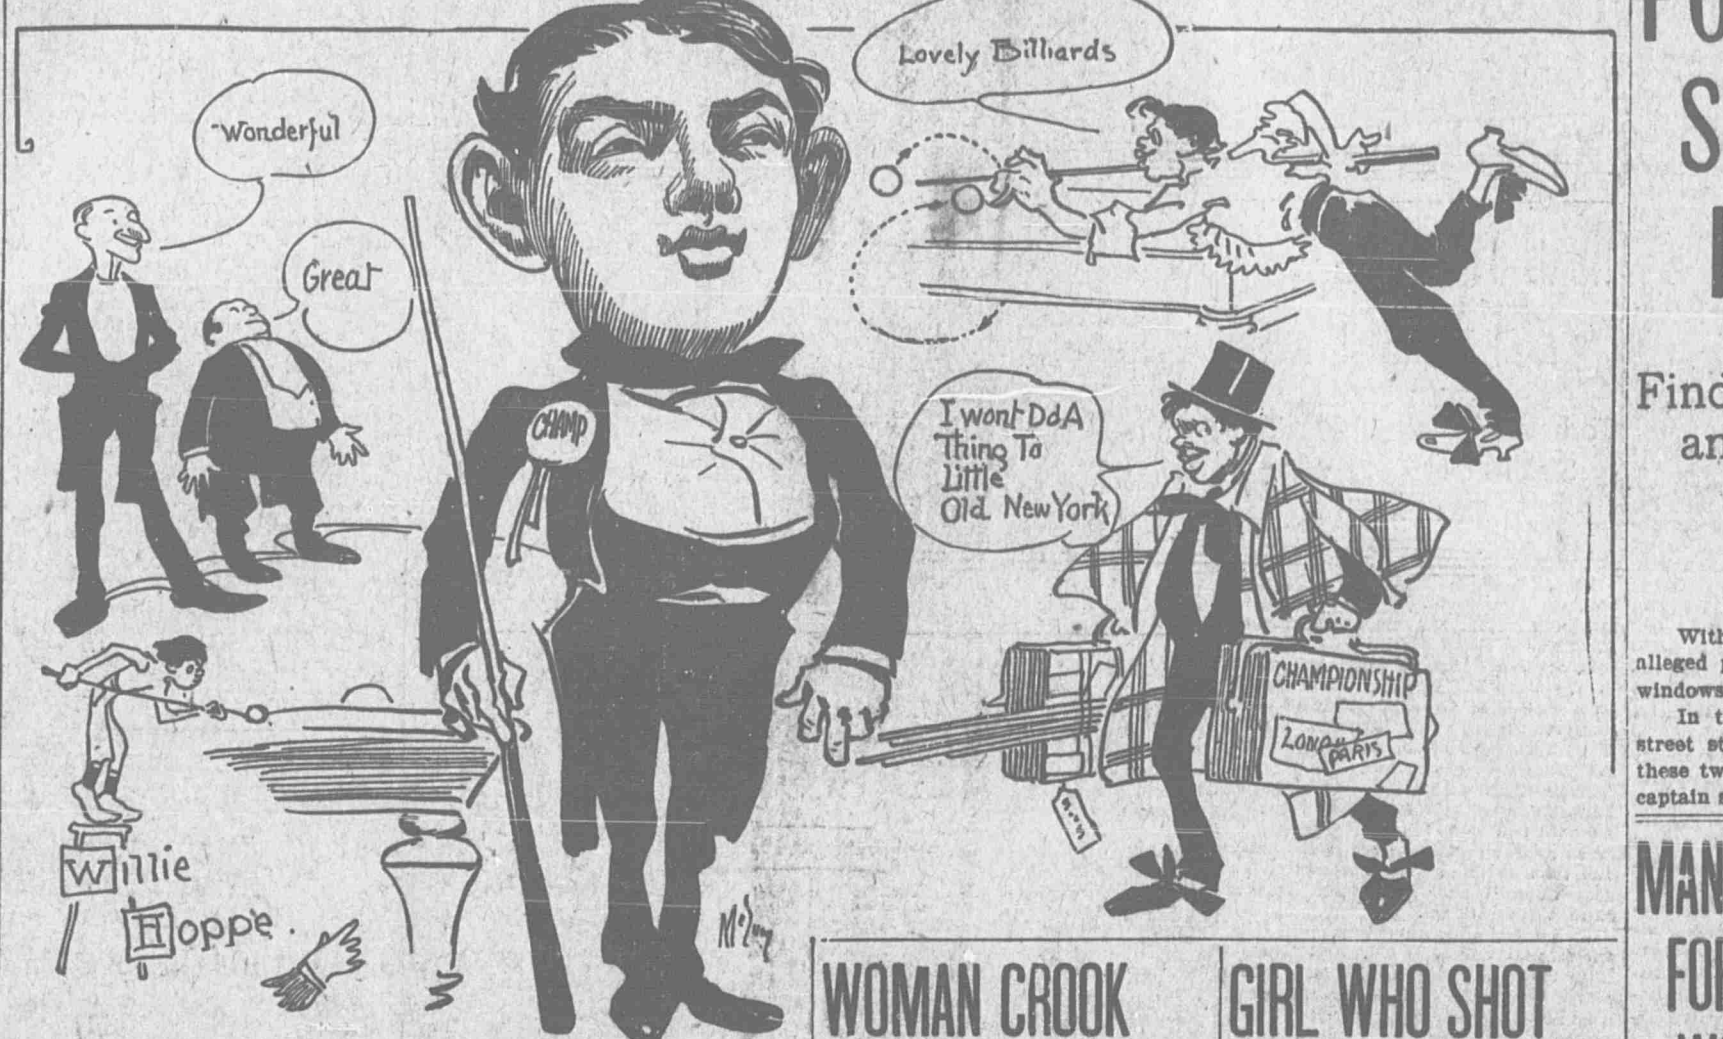

A crowd knitted itself in Miss Roosevelt's forenoon. Her heels came down on the dingy with a brisk little snapping sound. She quit replying to the banter of the others. They laughingly entered the situation. But Miss Alice was losing her temper.

At Madison avenue, and Sixty-ninth street she suddenly broke away from her three companions and walked straight up to the nearest photographer. The other three young women giggled.

POLICE WITH AXES SMASH WAY INTO IRON-BARRED CLUB

Find 200 Men in Alleged Pool-Room and Make Two Arrests—Fifty Escape by Roof and Windows and Over Rear Fences.

With axes and sledge-hammers the police this afternoon raided an alleged poolroom at No. 337 West Fifty-fifth street and sent flying through windows and over roofs half a hundred men, who made their escape.

In the alleged gaming place Capt. Daly, of the West Forty-seventh street station, and ten plain clothes men found 150 more men. Among these two arrests were made on warrants procured on evidence which the captain said his men had obtained by frequent visits to the resort.

Not since Schmittberger's famous Bon Ton Club raid had the Tenderloin seen such an exciting time as between the police and alleged race players. It was action from the moment that the word was given by Capt. Daly to cut loose the axes and sledgehammers against the doors and windows of the suspected pool-room.

But axes and sledge-hammers were never made that would go through iron bars in a moment and at the command of a police officer.

Place Iron Bound. Every window of the place was iron barred, and when the axes had been torn out that was what the wielders of the police weapons had to batter down before they could make an entrance. The doors were built like those of a dungeon of old, oaken-ribbed and iron-bound.

The obstacle which these iron bars offered to the raiders gave them inside the house time to make an escape. Fifty had fled through windows and down fire-escapes and up over roofs when the raid began.

An immense crowd of women and children saw the raid. The children were in their way from school and the officers of the assumed such proportion that the reserves of the Forty-seventh street station had to be summoned to clear the street.

The two men arrested described themselves as Fred Stachelsberg, a bartender, No. 34 Eighth avenue, and Edward Webber, a clerk, of No. 129 Lexington avenue.

Besides these two the police held warrants for five more men, who escaped. The raided house is known as the quarters of the Emerson Club, a cultured social organization, which has been in existence for several years.

According to the police, the place has been raided twice before and recently an injunction was secured by the officers of the police, to prevent further interference from the police.

Mrs. Acocks and her sister, Miss Grace Rice, twenty years old, were attacked. The negroes entered the house and set fire to it. To-day Frank Williams and Albert Mayhew were arrested to-day by Senator Brown and indicted by Mrs. Acocks and her sister.

Moves the Millionaires. ALBANY, JAN. 29.—A bill to abolish Hamilton County by annexing it to Fulton and Herkimer counties was introduced to-day by Senator Brown. The measure puts the millionaires camp owners in upper Hamilton in the county Fulton, which is controlled politically by Congressman Littauer, of glove and scumlet fame.

Man is Nabbed for Insulting Woman Official. Mrs. Hastings, School Board President, Will Appear to Prosecute.

Mrs. Ella Hastings, of No. 110 East Eighty-sixth street, president of the local School Board of District No. 16, to-day caused the arrest of a man who made an insulting remark to her. Magistrate Mayo later held the man, who gave the name of Edward Craye, twenty-nine years old, No. 301 East Ninety-fourth street, in $300 for examination Wednesday when Mrs. Hastings will appear against him.

The local school board president, a distinguished, gray-haired woman, had been called to the school board, presided at the midwinter graduation exercises of the Ninety-ninth street school to-day, presenting the diplomas. At the close of the exercises she went to Third avenue and waited for a street car at the corner of Ninety-ninth street. While waiting, a young rough sloughed up to her and made an insulting remark. Mrs. Hastings paid no attention but walked south a block. The man followed her until he saw her half policeman Baumbeck, of the East One Hundred and Fourth Street station, and briefly tell him of the insult.

Baumbeck saw the man turn and run. The policeman nailed Craye at Second avenue and Mrs. Hastings without waiting the result went home and dispatched a note to Capt. Zepren, asking him to show it to the Magistrate before whom the man was arraigned.

She wrote that she did not care to appear in public court, but would come if the Magistrate insisted, as she believed that women and girls should be protected from insult. Magistrate Mayo commended her action and said he would ask her to appear to-morrow as complaining witness.

No Investigation Made. This was done upon the request of the young woman's father and with the possible consent of the police. The police have not even conducted an investigation into the case, have not questioned the girl nor her mother, accepting as final Dr. Pemberton's statement that his daughter's mind had suffered a sudden collapse, following two years of brooding over the divorce suit that had separated her parents, in September, 1903.

That the divorced wife accompanied her daughter to Dr. Pemberton's home and stood under the shadow of a tree while the attempt was being made to strangle her, was declared by the Police Layton declared to an Evening World reporter he had not considered worthy of investigation.

He had accepted the following version of the shooting from Dr. Pemberton: "My son Harry, who until a short time ago had been living with his mother on Chelsea street, has been ill at his home for some time. Charlene had brought some things to the house, talked a while with Harry and then left. This was about 8 o'clock last night.

Prevented Her Suicide. "About one hour later she returned. She rang the bell and opened the door. As I stood in the vestibule she suddenly drew a revolver from under her cloak and before I could raise my hand placed it almost at my head. Then she fired. I barely had time to throw up my head. The bullet only pierced the flesh of my neck, so I retained my wits, and as she threw the weapon around as if to shoot herself, I struck it from her hand. As the revolver dropped at her feet she fled from the house to her mother's home, where she is now being nursed. I believe that the poor girl is damaged."

Dr. Pemberton said that yesterday she gave the names of Dr. Pemberton, the three petty larceny charges and was held for the Grand Jury on the grand larceny charge.
